'Surplus Woman' Has Views on 'Desirables'

(By International News Service.)
LONDON, April 24.—(Special Correspondence.)—"Leave us alone. We're all right," comes the exasperated wail of one Rachel Ferguson, who admits she may be a surplus woman, but who, nevertheless, draws her own blacklist of "woman who would not be missed."

The surplus woman discussion has been too much for Rachel's patience, and she says as much in the Daily Sketch.

"It to be unmarried readers you superfluous," she writes, "then the war has created a great number of surplus women—young fellows who cannot keep themselves, let alone a wife."

Then this is her list:

"To my mind the women truly falling under this head are those who are 'easy' to their fellow women, the scandal mongers, the sick malice-going, bargain-hunting, never-rise-until-eleveners, the willing loafers through life."

"To them add the woman who marries for comfort and refuses to have children (without having made her intentions plain to the man and giving him a chance to escape her), because babies will interfere with jazz teas and eat up money she wants for hats."

"And don't forget the woman with out-a-sense-of-humor, who is perhaps the most subtly superfluous of the lot, being neither a completed human being nor a satisfactory citizen of the world."

KING MOVES TO SUMMER HOME

By EARLE C. REEVES.
(International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, April 24.—The court of England's strenuous king, who now in peace time continues the interest in things of the people which won him popularity during the war, will within a few days move to Holyrood, Scotland, for a rest.

The royal family spent the Easter holidays in the fortress-like castle at Windsor, where the king gained a few days uninterrupted rest. Already he has planned that the visit to the royal Scottish residence shall not be all pleasure.

He plans a run into the industrial district of the Clyde to inspect the work which Britain hopes will put her far ahead of any possible competition in the ocean freightage of the world.

In the accounts of kingly duties and accomplishments, as written by the pencils of English reporters, there is obviously always the note of veneration for kingship, which presents the duties of the monarch in the best possible light. But when of this natural pride in kingship, the chronicle of the king's day reads like anything but historic revelations of emperors of bygone ages.

The king's direct duties of government are slight. But the social duties and requirements, of his position are of such magnitude as to be difficult of comprehension. When the king of the largest empire in the world has known makes racing meets notable by his attendance, it is merely the expected thing, for racing has always been the "sport of kings."

But there is nothing in the orthodox blue book of duties for the occupant of Buckingham Palace which says he must attend the sports of the people, the great football matches which are played before crowds of fifty and a hundred thousand. Yet he has whirled through the dust of miles of London streets to three or four big suburban matches within the past month. Frequently, without warning, and minus all pomp, he suddenly appears at some minor schoolboy affair, a classic annual "rag" or something of the sort. The ridiculous antics seem to be undampened by the presence of royalty.

Cocoon Oil Makes a Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Multisified cocoon oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Multisified cocoon oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

AUSTRIA HOLDS HOPE IN FUTURE

LONDON, April 24.—"Despite the great difficulties against which Austria has to struggle there are still prospects of her economic survival," declares Dr. Karl Renner, state chancellor of the republic of Austria, in an interview with the correspondent of the Sunday Times. "The chief requirement is that England and America grant credits to enable her to set her industries going at full speed."

"Wherever one looks there are signs present of a general desire for regular work. Moreover, confidence is spreading abroad because of the maintenance of order in Austria, and as a result of realization of her economic opportunities."

"During the last months the number of unemployed has been considerably reduced, partly as the result of a severe control of unemployment allowances and partly because of the industrial activity. The sum to be devoted to payment of these doles will play a very unimportant part in the coming budget."

"Expenditure for the civil service officials will naturally be considerable. But the number of them is not nearly so large as has been stated in certain exaggerated accounts."

The chief cause of the budget deficit is that of the depreciation of the currency. As a result of trade restrictions on the part of the countries on her borders, which countries formerly covered all her requirements in foodstuffs, together with the considerable decrease in production during the war, Austria is forced to obtain means of subsistence from America, although because of the present rate of exchange, prices paid for these supplies are enormously high. All the same, an immediate return to the prices of the world market parity would lead to serious social convulsions, and it is for this reason that the state bears the burden of the difference between the purchase prices abroad and the selling prices at home.

"Austria can offer very profitable possibilities for the investment of foreign capital. Her forests and her water power form a basis for great industrial development. Before the war there were many English firms which had flourishing factories in Austria, such as sewing cotton mills, factories for cellulose fabrics, engineering works, etc."

ORNATE GARB GAINS IN FAVOR

(By International News Service.)
LONDON, April 24.—Clothes shrieking with extraordinary colors, adorned by men and women this spring. The horses or flying birds, everything unconventional and ornate will be worn by men and women this spring. The Bradford textile merchants are bewildered at the demands for extraordinary clothing designs that are now being made of them.

There is evidence of a violent reaction from the comparatively sombre shades which have characterized both men's and women's dress during the dark days of the war. Men who have worn khaki for years are evincing a desire for something brighter, and with the necessity for wearing mourning imposed on almost every family in the land, the womanfolk have remained under painful restraint in regard to the use of the brighter and more becoming shades of material.

JEALOUS WIFE RUINED HIS PRACTICE, SAYS OSTEOPATH

(By International News Service.)

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Alleging that his wife was ruining his practice, Dr. Charles E. Robinson, an osteopath, filed a petition for divorce here the other day.

Massaging other women, Dr. Robinson said, seemed to rub Mrs. Robinson the wrong way.

MANY MOTHERS FLEEING HOMES

(By International News Service.)
DETROIT, Mich.—Mother love, ordinarily regarded as the supreme symbol of constancy, proved to be a poor second to father love in Detroit during the last three months. According to figures given out by the St. Vincent De Paul Society, in that period 21 mothers ran away from home and left their children. Only 15 fathers deserted in the same period.

James Fitzgerald, secretary of the society, points out that although laws against wife desertion are considered entirely too lax, machinery can be set in motion to bring a deserting husband back in some cases, but, he says, there is nothing in the statutes which makes a mother liable except in cases where infants are abandoned.

"The result seems to be," Fitzgerald declared, "that social workers generally are viewing this new tendency in the part of mothers with a great deal of alarm. It is bad enough when a man forgets his duty and leaves his family in distress, but when a mother forgets to protect her young, what can society do. So far as money goes, the children so deserted can be fed and clothed. But there is no substitute in the world for motherhood, and no effort which we can make to obtain a substitute ever really fills the bill."

"In one case a mother deserted three children, eloping with the family hoarder. The husband was trying a house on contract and the wife's chief source of dissatisfaction was

WEALTHY RUSS SEES RICHES GO

By LADISLAS CZAPSKI.
Written for the International News Service.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 24.—Spiridon Gromoff was a ban, director in Nikoloff, not far from Odessa, and when the war broke out his fortune had mounted to about 300,000 rubles. Besides, he owned several pieces of land in the district of Kleff. He and his young wife, with their two children, are in Constantinople now, penniless refugees.

Rubles to Mr. Gromoff were just merely rubles. In Russia, before the revolution, he was a man of wealth, almost a millionaire, and he believed in Russia. That was why he never put away any of his wealth in London, Paris or New York for the rainy day.

In the good old days his cash accumulations alone made him a rich man according to Russian standards. His 300,000 rubles were worth about 80,000 pounds sterling. In American dollars his rubles meant $100,000. As the revolution wore on, however, the ruble kept losing its exchange value so rapidly that by the time the bolsheviks made their coup d'etat his rubles on the London exchange would have brought him something like 8,500 pounds sterling. But by that time also his money had ceased to earn money and he had dug deeply into his savings, and as a matter of fact he really could have gotten only about 1,500 pounds sterling for what remained.

Since the bolshevik regime and during the civil war which followed, Mr. Gromoff's bank was little more than a weird joke. It brought him nothing. He lived on his remaining cash, spending on the average 6,000 rubles a month to keep his wife, children and himself alive. During last year's bolshevik occupation of Odessa he moved to that city from Nikoloff and he hoped persistently for better days. When Denikin captured the great port town he was sure something of his ruins could yet be saved.

But as the weeks passed, the ruble depreciated swiftly, and at the end when he and his family were about to board the refugee boat for Constantinople, his remaining 200,000 rubles were selling at 6,000 to a pound sterling. That is what he sold his own rubles for, and he landed here with the imposing sum of 33 pounds sterling.
